These are the complaints that have already been filed in court; we are also planning to file lawsuits against other drug companies. Even if you work for one of the companies that has already been sued for violating employees' overtime pay, we would still like to hear from you. These suits are class actions, which means that we can continually add plaintiffs to the lawsuit, if they have also suffered the same consequences.

If you work or worked for a company that is not listed here, we can also provide you with information about state and federal overtime laws and future lawsuits.

With our experience in wage and hour law, we can determine whether and what you are owed for your overtime.

Please be aware that the statute of limitations (the deadline imposed by law within which you may bring a lawsuit) may severely limit the time for you to file any potential claims. It is in your best interest to contact us as soon as possible.

Because we work on a contingency fee, you will not be charged anything for a consultation, for our legal advice or for joining the lawsuit. You will not pay any legal fees. In class action suits like these, the attorneys fees are paid if and when we reach a successful settlement. The precise terms of the engagement will be determined by the ethical rules of the appropriate jurisdiction.

If you have a lawyer, you should check with him or her. If you don't, you may contact us to determine if we can advise you. We are not giving legal advice and this is not intended to provide legal advice to any individual. Any individual requiring legal advice should consult their own attorney first.

Abbott sued by drug reps on overtime pay

June 29, 2007 -- Chicago Tribune

Pharmaceutical sales representatives, often maligned as good-looking, high-priced caterers of Subway sandwiches and Olive Garden meals to doctors' offices, are suing their employers, saying they are deprived of overtime pay "earned and owed." On Thursday, North Chicago-based Abbott Laboratories became the latest target of plaintiffs' attorneys bringing class-action suits on behalf of potentially hundreds of current and former drug reps against the powerful pharmaceutical industry. The plaintiffs say drugmakers have for years violated state and federal overtime laws.

Sales Reps File More Overtime Lawsuits

June 28, 2007 -- Pharnalot.com

Sales reps are filing lawsuits today against two more drugmakers - Bristol-Myers Squibb and Abbott Labs - over alleged violations of state and federal overtime laws. With these filings, all of the biggest drugmakers face overtime lawsuits in state and federal courts, according to the lawyers for the sales reps.

BMS, Abbott face drug-rep class suit

June 28, 2007 -- United Press International

Drug sales representatives Thursday filed a class action suit against U.S. firms Bristol-Myers Squibb and Abbot seeking overtime back pay. The complaint charges that the companies unlawfully classify pharmaceutical sales representatives as "exempt" under the Fair Labor Standards Act, a status that keeps the reps from collecting compensation for working overtime.

Kingsley & Kingsley Announces Pharmaceutical Reps File Overtime Lawsuits Against Bristol-Myers Squibb and Abbot Laboratories

June 28, 2007 -- Business Wire (press release)

This morning, pharmaceutical representatives filed lawsuits against the pharmaceutical giants Bristol-Myers Squibb and Abbott Laboratories. The suits are the latest in a series of class actions by employees for violation of state and federal overtime laws by drug companies. All of the largest drug companies are now facing national overtime lawsuits filed in state and federal courts in California, New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Connecticut.
